Landmark campaign launched to stamp out slavery

A hard-hitting television advert focusing on the human cost of slavery has been premiered as part of a major new Home Office campaign to raise awareness of modern slavery in the UK. The national campaign, which will run in the UK until October, is the first of its kind in this country and aims to encourage the public to identify the signs of modern slavery and report it by calling a new national helpline.

ACPO Response to Home Office modern slavery campaign

Speaking as the Home Office launched their new modern slavery campaign and the dedicated www.modernslavery.co.uk website, the President of the Association of Chief Police Officers, Sir Hugh Orde, said: "I am very pleased to support the Home Office's campaign against modern slavery. "The police service, under our national policing lead on modern slavery, Chief Constable Shaun Sawyer, has been hard at work not only tackling those cases which get reported to us but also sourcing and acting on intelligence, and investigating the most effective means of policing this horrendous crime."

Murder charge: Firearms officers 'shell shocked'

Firearms officers around the country are considering their position amid the fear of what could happen to them in the wake of a fatal incident, it has been claimed. Mark Williams, CEO of the Police Firearms Officers Association, said "shell shocked" officers may now quit because they felt it "wasn't worth" continuing in the voluntary role. Mr Williams was speaking in the wake of a Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) decision to charge a former Met colleague - known only as E7 - with the murder of Azelle Rodney.

Detective casebook: Untangling the web of child prostitution

In one of the most complicated investigations of its kind, Jasmin McDermott reports on how the meticulous and innovative approach of officers brought to an end years of disturbing child prostitution at the hands of two offenders.

PCC: 'Give money for officers not tech'

Government money given to a force for new technology would be better spent on extra officers, according to a police and crime commissioner (PCC) and a Federation official. Nottinghamshire Police were given a share of £1.7 million from the Home Office's Police Innovation Fund as the lead force in a collaborative body worn video bid. It was also given part of £2.9 million for an ICT platform for crime, intelligence and custody from the same scheme. But the force's Police and Crime Commissioner Paddy Tipping, who was responsible for placing the bids, told the Nottingham Post he would rather spend the money on increasing the number of officers the force has.

Budget cuts 'have hit the use of conditional cautions'

Senior magistrate voices concerns that cautions designed to address offender's behaviour are not being used to take the 'route of least cost'. Police are using conditional cautions too sparingly - and have said they are being told to take this course of action to cut costs, the Chair of the Magistrates Association has said.
