Home Office guidance on protecting crowded places: design and technical issues

2. Strategic policing and crime news

Home Affairs Select Committee \(HASC\) Report – inquiry into PCCs

The report finds that it is still too early to tell whether or not the introduction of PCCs has been a success. It says the concept of PCCs is still on probation. It says that police and crime panels have struggled to understand their powers and define their role. The report states that many of the difficulties faced by PCCs could have been avoided if they had been given the opportunity to find their feet before commencing their job. It also states that the appointment of deputies needs to be more transparent and changes are required regarding the removal or suspension of chief constables.

Home Affairs Select Committee \(HASC\) Report – Counter Terrorism

The oversight system for the intelligence services requires strengthening and the responsibility for counter-terrorism policing should be transferred from the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) to the National Crime Agency (NCA), a Parliamentary report has concluded.

NCA – National Strategic Assessment of Serious and Organised Crime 2014

The Assessment has been produced outlining the continuing change in the UK's law enforcement landscape, starting with PCC elections, followed by the launch of the NCA and publication of the Government's Serious and Organised Crime Strategy in October 2013.

Re-designing forces: Promising practice heralds new era

As chiefs battle to maintain an effective policing presence while achieving financial savings many senior leaders have found ever more creative ways to re-design their forces as a new policing era dawns. Jasmin McDermott reports.

Collaboration 'will not save visible policing'

Sharp end reductions cannot be met by efficiency measures, according to senior policing professionals.

Officers face 'double jeopardy' in professional standards probes

Federation official argues officers are subject to double standards by police watchdog despite being acquitted at court.

Police and prison officer killers to face life in prison

Anyone who kills a police or prison officer in the course of their duty will face spending the rest of their lives behind bars, Justice Secretary Chris Grayling has announced. The changes to the law being made by the Ministry of Justice will mean that judges will start by considering a whole life term when deciding the sentence for killing either a police or prison officer in the course of their duty. This is an increase from the current starting point of a 30-year minimum term. Judges would retain the discretion to determine the appropriate sentence in each case - a whole life term will not be mandatory.

3. Developments and reports

Cautious optimism

On Monday, the Home Affairs Select Committee published a report on Police and Crime Commissioners, stating that "PCCs have provided greater clarity of leadership for policing within their areas", but that it is too early to tell whether their introduction has been a success.

Hate crime: Report finds significant progress in reducing hate crime

A report on the progress made in the past 2 years has been published. Achievements include: better education of secondary school pupils, improved recording by police and work with major internet service providers in the UK and USA to reduce the harm caused by hate material on the internet. The report also discusses the spike in anti-Muslim sentiment following the murder of Lee Rigby.

£30 million boost to improve the lives of Britain's most vulnerable young people

Social Impact Bonds will be used to help 14-24 year olds develop the crucial skills to improve their educational achievement and employability and prevent them from falling into a situation where they are not in education, employment or training (NEET).

Concerns about crime data integrity

The interim HMIC report on crime data integrity identifies serious concerns about the crime-recording process.

Service Transformation Challenge Panel: call for evidence

On 2 April 2014, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury and Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government launched an independent Service Transformation Challenge Panel to advise what needs to happen nationally and locally to increase the pace and scale of service transformation. The panel will provide further support and challenge, and make a set of recommendations, on what needs to happen locally and nationally to increase the pace of integration between local public services.
